These are skills that can help students attain get better grades and spend less time on homework...how can they be boring? Honestly, there is a good explanation for the bad rap that study skills have developed over the years because a lot of BORING things are labeled as “study skills.” Students will write journal responses to thought-provoking questions given to them each day.

Study Skills are:

The skills required to be an independent learner

Skills that build confidence

Skills that improve performance to prepare our students for high-stakes tests and the globally competitive job market of the future

Skills that enable students to be proactive, make good decisions, and think critically.
